LONDON LETTER.

Mary Anderson as She Appeared in Gilbert's "Comedy and Tragedy."

She is Continuously and Superlatively Violent in Her Acting.

A Breezy Criticism of Gilbert's Latest Airy Production.

How the English Enjoy Having Mary's Goodness Thrust at Them.

LONDON, Jan. 29 .- The Lyceum was packed last night to see Mary Anderson in a new piece, written for her by W. S. Gilbert, en-titled "Comedy and Tragedy." The curtain rose on a very charming set scene, the interior of the house of Clarics, an actress (Mary Anderson). The plot, as far as I could make out, is taken from scenes in the life of the Regent of France, the Duc d'Orleans, and is summed up in an idea that actors, being thought so little of in that time, were refused Christian burial. Clarice, an actress, has fallen in love with and married a young nobleman, an officer in the Regent's army. He throws up his commission, and for love of her goes upon the stage. I am led to believe that the Regent before the opening of this play had sent several persocuting letters to Clarice; also that he had dared be in love with her, and once the actress I prein love with her, and once the actress I presume has had every reason to believe that the Regent wished to carry her off. I am forcibly reminded of one reason, perhaps, why the profession enjoyed so little respect from the people of the Due d'Orleans' time.
Now, I should have thought it more indelicate for an actress to trap a king to the house of any amorous ruse for the purpose of house of any amorous ruse for the purpose of giving him a lesson—or assignating him—than to have received a few harmless letters, asking her to sup or dine, as the case might have been. Ideas of honor differ. I also observed that the nobleman whom Clarice had married did not seem to know any other way to protect his wife than by instigating and abotting this little scheme of revenge for financial insult. Surely Mr. Gilbert need not go back to the eighteenth century for the precedent of asking a lady to dine or sup to meet royalty, and to take it hardly. I am led to believe that the nineteenth has also been equally prolific, and I know of few noblemen, even if they had played for two years instead of one in amateur theatricals, who would inveigle the amateur theatricals, who would inveigle the true reigning monarch, or even the heir to a throne, to come to a feast of death. Once there I much doubt the Regent's appreciation of the gentlemanliness of his hosts.

Apart from these notorious facts, I remarked the striking situatious in the piece were the usual ones. Clarice, at the beginning of this play, has led the world to believe were the usual ones. Clarice, at the beginning of this play, has led the world to believe that after one year of marriage she and her husband are separated. The first laugh came from a fashionable and nee when she said that "Husbands are gone out. They won't be worn this year." (I think the text is verbal.) This remark was made to her sister (Miss O'Reilly), Pauline, who has come to exhort with her on her exceeding frivolity. She has heard that the Regent and a host of noblemen are to sup with Clarice. She (with myself), not knowing that the actress was only carrying out her nobleman husband's gentlemanly plans for satisfaction, remonstrated in vain, and then left. I really could not see why the sister was dragged in, nor why, when in, her diluted, although honest, sentiments were not more diffused throughout the piece. After her departure the husband comes in through the window irons, and goes secretly into the garden after the final hatching of his gentlemanly plot, there to wait until his wife calls. In the next scene I suffered no strain upon my memory to recall the supper scene of "La Dame aux Camelias"—the arrival of the guests by twos and threes, even to the doctor; the arrival of the fered no strain upon my memory to recall the supper scene of "La Dame aux Camelias"—the arrival of the guests by twos and threes, even to the doctor; the arrival of the Regent, the lover, and the flight of the noble guests to the supper room. Clarice begged pardon for having allowed them to precede the Regent, who only smiled amorously, as near as I could judge, for his back was toward me. Clarice then attempts to go up stairs, but suddenly faints, or something like it. I think it was intended for a faint. The Regent supported her; she said that she felt better, and begged pitcously for sir. The Regent politely threw open the windows. Here, I must say, there was a moment of breathless suspense. I feared, as did every one, that this gentlemanly husband was going to shoot his royal tormentor then and there; but he gave him time. Clarice wishes to join her guests. The Regent begs her to think of him, evidently the star of the party, and she does think. He begins making pretty speeches to her, accenting them with one arm thrown on the back of the lady's tapestry. This is enough; the fatal sign is given, and the buscand rushes in. Tableau; the Regent smiled. her, accenting them with one arm thrown on the back of the lady's tapestry. This is enough; the fatal sign is given, and the hus-pand rushes in. Tableau! the Regent smiled, and said, "This is a trap." I thought myself it was very like it. I may remark here that his royal highness objected slightly to the whole affair, and when asked to fight his gentlemanly host refused because he was only an actor. This seemed to me the excess of politeness—calling him an actor. was only an actor. This seemed to me the excess of politeness—calling him an actor. The husband draws a paper from his pocket, saying, "This is an engagement to play at the Theatre Francaise. Well, you call me an actor. I tear it up, and we are equals. I am a gentleman. Will you fight me now?" or words to that effect. Moral—Beware of strips of paper. Again, this peculiar insistance on his nobility. It is unfortunate for Mr. Gilbert's here that his patent right to considerahis nobility. It is unfortunate for Mr. Gil-bert's hero that his patent right to considera-tions on account of his birth should have been so little patent to the public. When the two were together I had not the slightest dif-ficulty in perceiving which was the gentle-man, and I am sure I was not prejudiced in facer of revealty.

The Regent consents to fight on consider-The Regent consents to fight on consideration that only they three are to know it. He informed Clarice that he was a perfect swordsmap. As I am led to believe it was the habit in those days to bring up royal youth with some idea of self-defense on account of their families. Clarice, after informing her guest that she also had agreed that this was the heat way to answer his love that this was the best way to answer his love letter, is suddenly stricken with the thought that her husband may be killed. They rush to the garden and see is in the midst of rush to the garden and sae is in the midst of this reflection when her guests return from the supper, counting money and offering to play strangely like the ball scene of "La Dame aux Camelins." Carice is asked to improvise for their entertainment. She does it in scenes of comedy and tragedy. The comedy is success, the tragedy real, as she hears a scream in the garden, and thinks it may be her hughed design. The doctor who had the her husband dying. The doctor, who had the key to the garden door, wishes to open it, when in rushes the sol-disant injured husband, who has dangerously but triumphantly wounded the Regent. Everything is explained, the actors all seem satisfied, and the curtain falls.

Mary Anderson is a beautiful woman, but not as clover as she is handsome. She was so continuously violent throughout the whole act, and particularly in the first scene, that continuously violent throughout the whole act, and particularly in the first scene, that bring had happened. She was like a raving lunatic. I remembered her success years ago as Mcg Merrilles, Charlotte Cushman's great role, and perhaps Mary Anderson's greatest triumph was in making the shriveled hag as interesting to the public as a beautiful woman. I noticed some of the gestures in the speech on "comedy" which reminded me of Meg. Her facial expression was at times quite expressive. She acted throughout with great earnestness and conscience. Her tollet was gorgeous, but not young enough for her. Neither was the red wig over becoming. She should have worn pewder to match her gown. The piece is one of Mr. Gilbert's airy trifles, and quite in his own style. I must thank him that he has kindly put it is one act. He has quoted from himself several times, and I was not surprised to hear her remark "Here to-day and gone tomorrow," while I fear bids fair to become a classic. He showed striking originality in his comparison of a royal passion with water boiling on the fire. We were told that if the water boiled it was not the fault of the water, but the fire. I suppose this was in reference to the Regent's love for Clarice. Was she the fire? And how about the water going to the fire? And how about the water going to the fire? Whose fault was that? Really I am obtuse, but I had not thought to the point of not understanding Mr. Gilbert's wit. I was reminded of the boy whose father had told him that the early bird catches the worm. "Served him right," said the boy, "it was the worm's fault. What's he doing out so early?" Mr. Gilbert here misses an opportunity of going into Gilbertian ruetaphysics in an elucidation of man and his passions; water, why it boils, and the fire, why it condescends to burn.

The dislies have almost ignored the piece, and I have not seen any public vote of thanks to Mr. Gilbert for his historical preoccupation.

For the first time we learn how died the Duc d'Orleans, Louis XIV's nephew. We have always known him dissolute enough, and it seemed strange that he should end in so gentlemanly a manner. By the way, his family used to assist at his thearrical supper verties and I believe even to his two time.

family used to assist at his theatrical supper parties, and I believe even to his two innocent daughters. Was he a second Lot?

The whole of London agrees that Mary Anderson has beauty and talent, but they are not equalized. A man about town said a clever thing about her: "Elle a tons les vices, meme vertu." The clubs are in despair. Farm Street church is crowded to see her as she goes to mass, and the only thing which is beginning to pall is this excessive goodness, thrust de rigeur upon the world at large. She should remember Aristides and and Athens.

COLORADO REPUBLICANS.

Meeting of the State Association-Speeches by Messrs. Belford, Tankersley, and Others.

The Colorado Republican association met last night at St. George's hall. There was a large attendance of members, and during the evening the meeting was visited by many prominent republicans from the state, who prominent republicans from the state, who are temporarily in the city, among whom were Judge P. P. Wilcox, Hon. Joseph Freeman, and Col. C. W. Tankersley.

The meeting was addressed by the Hon. James B. Belford at some length. In the course of his remarks he recalled the occasion when the first steps were taken to organize a Colorodo association in this city. It was at the inauguration of President Garfield, when every county in the state was represented, and when, as the Colorado club, they marched to the white house to witness the inand when, as the Colorado club, they marched to the white house to witness the inauguration; that he was glad to see so many from the state, and that they had organized themselves into an association of this character; that while our number here was small, we were citizens of a state that, save in population, was greater than Pennsylvania. While our representation in congress is yet small, and our state young, he said, still we had reason to be proud of its influence in the nation. We have cut no inconspicuous figure in national affairs. The office of secretary of the interior, the most important in the cabinet, was held by one of her citizens, and his able administration of the affairs of the department was an honor to the state and nation. Col. C. W. Tankersley, of Denver, addressed the meeting. He said he was lately from Denver, and spoke particularly of the coming election for president and the feeling of the people of Colorado on that question. He thought that Hon. John-A. Logan seemed to be the choice of the whole party, and he felt assured a solid delegation for him would go to Chicago. During the encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic at Denver he had endeared himself to the people generally. If, however, Gen. Grant were a candidate Colorado would give him her united voice.

New England Tea Party.

At a called meeting of the Ladies' Mite ociety of Ryland chapel, South Washington, held last evening, it was decided to have a "New England tea party" at that church on Tuesday evening, Feb. 26, The following

Tuesday evening, Feb. 26. The following named 'adies were appointed a committee to take the matter in charge: Mrs. F. A. Gee. Mrs. Annie, Mrs. Vermillion, Mrs. Ella Harman, and Misses Addie Tune, Addie Stahl, Marion Hendley, Viola Leach, Luin Barber, Annie Dyer, Belle Halliday, Cora Phillips, Ida Winters, and Cora Walker.

It is the intention of this committee to imitate, as near as possible, the plain and healthful diet of the hardy forefathers of the castern states at their social gatherings. Brown bread, pork and beans, doughnuts, and pumpkin pies will probably figure prominently in the meal. A nominal admission fee of 25 cents will be charged, but the principal object aimed at by charged, but the principal object aimed at by the ladies is to promote the sociability of the members of the church and congregation, and at the same time offer an evening's enter-tainment of an innocent but novel nature. Former entertainments under the auspices of these ladies have been such pronounced suc-cesses that the enjoyableness of this one is viding for Their Disposition. The bill reported yesterday by Senator Cockrell, from the committee on military affairs to provide for the disposition of abandoned and useless military reservations, provides that the lands included within any military reservation which have or may become useless for military purposes shall be placed under the centrol of the secretary of the interior for appraisal and public sale at not less than $1.25 per sore, and also that such lands shall not be subject to location by warrant or land scrip of any description and shall not be subject to the homestead, pre-emption, or timber culture laws.

In the report accompanying the bill the committee submits a table showing the location and the areas of the military reservations, which shows that there are in sil 179 such reservations, whose areas aggregate 2,920,580 acres. Alabama has 1: Arizona, 13; Arkaneas,2; California, 19; Colorado, 5; Dakota, 10; Florida, 16; Idaho, 5; Illinois, 1; Kansas, 6; Louislana, 7; Michigan, 6; Minnesota, 2 (besides Fort Snelling); Missouri, 3; Montana, 8; Nebraska, 6; New Mexico, 13; Novada, 3; Oregon, 4; Utah, 4; Washington territory, 35; Wisconsin, 1, and Wyoming, 9 of such reservations. The largest quantity of land reserved in any one state or territory is in Dakota, where the area of the reservations is 985,339 acres. Montana comes next with $39,056 acres; New Mexico and Wyoming have each more than 21,000 acres so reserved, and Arizona has 197,000. culture laws. and Arizona has 197,000.

The committee also presents a table em-bodied in a report made by Gen. Sheridan, under date of Dec. 10, 1883, showing that the lands included within the abandoned and uscless military reservations aggregate 711,-

The committee's report states that many of these reservations have been abandoned for ten years, and that no power is vested in the President to restore such reservations to the public domain.

Glass and Pottery Interests. The ways and means committee gave s hearing vesterday to the representatives of the glass and pottery industries, who made arguments against the proposed reduction of the tariff. Mr. John Moses, of Trenton, N. J., read a paper, in which he said that the cost of pottery wares to consumers is 50 per cent. less to-day than it was in 1860, and that that reduction of price is largely due to the encouragement of the domestic manufacture. He also asserted that the wages paid by the Trenton potters are 125 per cent. higher than those paid by English competitors for the same work. Mr. Moses said the carriage of pottery to San Francisco and New Orleans coats less from Liverpool than it does from Trenton. Mr. T. W. Morris, of New York, an importer of glass, favored the proposed reduction, as did Mr. J. H. Heroz, also an importer. Mr. E. S. Day, of Kent, Ohio, and Mr. J. M. Seete, of St. Louis, manufacturers, opposed a reduction. Mr. Seste cent. less to-day than it was in 1860, and facturers, opposed a reduction. Mr. Seste said it would result in closing glass manufacturing establishments in his country.
